CLEVEMORE OR LESS BROWNS

What in sam hill is going on in the NFL. Talk about lack of team/city allegiance. The Browns to Baltimore... the Oilers to Nashville... the Buccaneers to who-knows-where... the Bears...

Well, they were threatening to move... but I think nobody wants 'em.

Actually, the latest word is that a group of investors unveiled an offer Wednesday to build a 205-million dollar open air stadium in Gary, Indiana. The stadium would seat 75-thousand and have 135 luxury skyboxes... but no stupid pillars.

Honestly, I don't think any true Packers fan would want them to move away. Dah-Bears are like a pesky distant derelict cousin who you love to beat up on every once in a while. And if they actually did threaten to leave Illinois, the city of Green Bay would probably have to buy the franchise just to keep the NFL's oldest rivalry intact.

By-the-way, a "Save The Browns" campaign has begun in Ohio by the mayor of Cleveland and area McDonald's restaurants. They are trying to gather two-million signatures in a petition to keep the team in Cleveland. (Incidentally, they were contemplating a "Save The Bears" petition in Chicago... until they realized that not too many residents know how to use a pen.) And Ohio radio stations are giving out phone and fax numbers of NFL team offices to their listeners in the hope that they will let the owners know that they don't want their team relocating to Baltimore. Meanwhile, the Browns will beef up security for today's game against the Packers. It's the first home game for Cleveland since owner Art Modell announced his intent to move the team. Modell will not be attending the remaining games.

Game Of The Week: St. Louis at Atlanta

YOU BET... IT'S BRETT

Our Green Bay boy Brett Farve was the NFC offensive player of the week. He completed 25 of 33 passes for 336 yards and a club record-tying 5 TD's against Chicago last Sunday. That game marked Brett's fourth 300-yard passing performance of the season. And here's another Packers fast-fact. Did you know that fourth-year Green Bay Packers coach Mike Holmgren has not lost a game in November?

IT'S HARD ROCK DAY TODAY, HEY!

Packer Andrea MacNary has graciously donated a load of nice Hard Rock Cafe prizes to be given away to lucky CFGBPB members during today's game. Andrea has a job that would make anyone Packer-green with envy. She is one of a few people in charge of the Hard Rock Cafe's memorabilia that you see on the walls of their restaurants. She travels the world buying famous musician's guitars, drums, clothes, (and in the case of Madonna) underwear... and then she travels the world again putting all the stuff up in cities like New York, London, Paris, Munich (everybody's talking about Pop Music...). When you get a chance, stop over and say "Hi" to Packer Andrea during the game. Good luck!
